Internationalization at home

Internationalization at Home is an academic strategy that allows UADE students to access international learning experiences without traveling abroad. Through academic, and collaborative activities, students gain a global perspective within their courses, on campus, or from their own homes.

These initiatives foster knowledge exchange, the development of intercultural competencies, and direct interaction with international universities, faculty, and experts, enhancing students' academic and professional training in a global context.

COIL | CEU & UADE

In October, a new edition of the COIL (Collaborative Online International Learning) program was carried out, involving students from the Biotechnology and Nutrition undergraduate programs at Universidad Argentina de la Empresa (UADE) and Universidad CEU San Pablo in Spain.

Throughout the experience, students developed international collaborative projects, successfully overcoming the academic challenges associated with cross-border teamwork.

International Visits

International and institutional visits are a key component of UADE's internationalization strategy, fostering strong relationships with universities, organizations, and key academic and diplomatic stakeholders. Through visits by international professors, deans, ambassadors, and representatives from partner institutions, the UADE community benefits from academic, cultural, and professional exchange.

These initiatives enrich campus life, promote international cooperation, and strengthen UADE's institutional presence worldwide.
